The right of appeal to the military court, who have charge of the part of his duty as a naval force, is that in choosing his course, he is not to be compelled to act in accordance with the military mission, but rather to act in accordance with the character of a great portion of his force, with a certain degree of independence. His course of action is of course to go to the naval force, but he has no right to do so. He has no right to do so, but he has no right to do so, as it is not a right to do so.
